STATUS LEGEND

A = fully practised with stable user-specific answer. A2 = newly practised and still needs retakes. B = linked/practised but some wording/details are reconstructed from retained notes. C = scheduled/exposed topic without enough confirmed personal detail; Codex must not invent autobiography.

PART1: 20-30s: Direct answer -> Reason/Effect -> Small detail. Answer the exact question first; do not turn a narrow question into a broad essay.

PART2: 1:40-2:00: 1 minute prep with 6 keywords. Long-term chain: Background -> Difficulty -> Event -> Turning Point -> Result -> Reflection. Cover all cue-card bullets; do not memorize a full script.

PART3: 45-60s: PEEL = Point -> Explanation -> Example/Effect -> Link. Teacher question-type buckets: listing, comparison, agree/disagree, solution/how, prediction. Cause/reason questions use the same Point + Why + Example logic.

Software rule: When importing into Wordly, keep storyCluster / status / needsPersonalDetails. A generic question-bank sample must never overwrite a user-specific story.

01 Describe a boring place you have been to

无聊的地方 | A - Fully practised | Cluster: LIBRARY

library / last week + classmate / project deadline / quiet + whisper / papers + sore eyes / productive but boring

Story core: University library -> last week -> classmate -> project deadline -> whole afternoon -> whispering / papers / sore eyes -> productive but frustrating.

Can link to: Boring place / Quiet place / Place to study / Difficult study experience

Stable answer / handling note

The boring place I'd like to talk about is the library at my university. I went there last week with one of my classmates because we both had an important project deadline. We still had a lot of work to do, so we decided to spend the whole afternoon there. We arrived at around one o'clock after lunch and didn't leave until nearly six. To be honest, I wasn't really looking forward to going there because I already knew it would be long and tiring. The library itself is clean, quiet and actually a good place to study, but that's also the main reason I find it boring. Everyone has to keep quiet, so when I wanted to discuss my project with my classmate, we had to whisper. That was a little inconvenient. Another reason was that I spent almost the whole afternoon reading academic papers and staring at my laptop. After a while, my eyes felt sore and time seemed to pass really slowly. I couldn't relax by watching videos or chatting because I didn't want to disturb other people. The silence gradually became a bit stressful and frustrating. Of course, I have to admit that the library was productive because I finished most of my work that day. But if you ask me whether I enjoyed spending the whole afternoon there, definitely not. That's why it's one of the most boring places I've been to.

High-value corrections

- I go there last week -> I went there last week
- must have to whisper -> had to whisper / must whisper
- feel not very relax -> did not feel relaxed
- not freedom -> do not feel free / have very little freedom

Active vocabulary: deadline, the whole afternoon, whisper, inconvenient, productive, frustrating, sore eyes, disturb other people

02 Describe a high-rise / tall building you like or dislike

喜欢或不喜欢的高楼 | B - Linked and practised | Cluster: LIBRARY

university library / about 7 floors / glass exterior / reading rooms / study / deadline / too quiet

Story core: Reuse the university library. Shift focus from “boring afternoon” to building: around seven floors, glass exterior, modern, reading/study use, but too quiet and restrictive for discussion.

Can link to: High-rise building / Building you dislike / Place you often visit

Stable answer / handling note

When it comes to a high-rise building I dislike, the first building that comes to mind is the main library at my university. If I remember correctly, it has around seven floors and much of the outside is covered with glass, so it looks quite modern. Most of the building is used for reading, studying and doing assignments, and I often use the reading rooms when I have a deadline. The problem is that I find the atmosphere too quiet. Everyone has to keep their voice down, so it is difficult to discuss a group project naturally. After sitting there for hours and staring at my laptop, I also start to feel tired and my eyes feel sore. I understand why a library needs to be quiet, but personally I do not enjoy staying there for a long time. That is why it is a building I use quite often but do not really like.

High-value corrections

- the place is high -> it is a high-rise building
- comes to my mind -> comes to mind
- covered by glass -> covered with glass
- must have to keep quiet -> have to keep quiet

Active vocabulary: high-rise building, covered with glass, reading room, keep your voice down, deadline

Can link to: Local news / Community facility / Useful place in the neighbourhood

A piece of local news I remember was about a new community centre opening near my neighbourhood. My sister told me about it first, and later I saw more information about it online. The centre included a small library, a gym and some shared spaces where people could have coffee or join workshops. I went there not long after it opened and spent some time reading and looking around. I think local residents were interested because it was not just a piece of news; it was something that could make daily life more convenient. Older people could use the facilities, students could study there, and families had a new place to spend time together. For me, it created a warmer and more connected feeling in the neighbourhood, so I remember the news quite clearly.

A happy person I know is my uncle, who runs a restaurant in my hometown. What makes him stand out is his positive attitude. No matter what happens, he usually tries to look on the bright side. Even when the restaurant is busy, he speaks to us in a cheerful voice and laughs a lot. I rarely see him stay in a negative mood for long. What I admire most is that he can find joy in small moments, such as having a nice meal, chatting with customers or spending time with family. However, I really wanted to learn more about industrial design and meet people working in the field, so in the end I decided to join. During the programme, I attended a lecture given by a well-known industrial designer. After the talk, I had the chance to speak with him in person. However, once we started talking, I found that he was kind, warm-hearted and easy-going, so I gradually felt more relaxed. During the interview, I asked him where he got his design inspiration and what difficulties he faced when he first entered the design field. What impressed me most was his view of good design. He told me that design is not only about making a product look attractive; more importantly, it should understand people's real needs and solve real problems in daily life. At the beginning, Mr Zhang, an industrial designer, gave us a lecture on design thinking and how to notice problems in everyday life. Later, we worked on team projects and learned some basic electronics and prototyping skills, such as how to make a product respond or move. What impressed me most was seeing the different projects created by the students. Some groups made small robots or simple interactive devices, while others focused on healthcare-related products. When I was a child, I learned how to swim during a summer vacation. It was a very memorable experience for me because swimming was quite difficult at the beginning. At first, I was really afraid of water, and I did not know how to control my body in the pool. I had some problems with my arm and leg movements, and I did not know how to breathe properly in the water. Sometimes water got into my mouth and nose, which made me feel very uncomfortable. At one point, I even wanted to give up. Luckily, one of my friends was very patient with me. She held my hand and taught me how to move my arms, kick my legs and breathe properly in the water. So instead of giving up, I just kept practising and followed her instructions. Gradually, I became more comfortable in the water. After practising for some time, I could finally swim by myself. I am going to describe a time when I saved money to buy something I really wanted. When I was at university, my campus was huge, and it was inconvenient to walk from my dormitory to the classrooms every day. So I wanted to buy a motorcycle to make travelling around campus easier. However, a new one was too expensive for me as a student. Instead of buying a brand-new one, I decided to look on my university's second-hand marketplace. After searching for a while, I found a friendly seller who offered a reasonable price. The motorcycle was still in good condition, so I decided to buy it. After that, my daily life became much easier, and I also saved quite a lot of money. I felt very satisfied because it was useful, affordable and good value for money. Teacher Method Notes | 2026-10-05

Exact-question control

For Part 1, every supporting detail must serve the question. “Have you ever bought shoes online?” is about whether you have done it; answer yes/no, then one specific purchase/time/experience. Do not drift into frequency or a general essay on online-shopping pros/cons.

Names topic

For “How do you remember people's names?” , give a concrete method. For “How do you feel when people can't remember your name?” , either sensitive/anxious or easy-going/not bothered is acceptable as long as the reasoning is logical.

Part 2 coherence

Build the story by timeline or cause-effect. Professional/detail vocabulary must support the story; otherwise answers sound empty.

Part 3 method

Current teacher framing: five broad answer types - listing, comparison, agree/disagree, solution/how, prediction. The point is to trigger a fixed reasoning route instead of going blank.

Vocabulary

Do not spend speaking-class time collecting random words. Use topic-relevant prepared vocabulary to improve precision/diversity, but grammar accuracy comes first.

Grammar

Priority is “do not make repeated basic errors” : tense, pronouns, word form, prepositions/collocations.

Pronunciation

Reduce drawn-out fillers and trailing sounds. Shadow listening audio to imitate rhythm and intonation.

Global Error Bank | 全局自动化规则

Past tense: when I was a child / last week / last year -> lock the whole story into past simple.

Pronouns: For sister/person stories, keep he/she consistent from start to finish.

be + adjective: I am tidy; I am confident; I felt relaxed; I am grateful.

Modal + base verb: can teach / should go / must use; no “must to” .

feel + adjective: feel bored / relaxed / frustrated / grateful.

Uncountables: knowledge, scenery, effort are usually uncountable in these answers.

Collocations: be patient with; proud of; addicted to; listen to music; ask him for help; pay attention to.

Restart control: If meaning is clear, continue. Do not restart the whole sentence. If stuck >2-3 seconds, downgrade to a simple SVO sentence.

Filler control: Reduce uh / um / I think I think / because because / and and. A short silent pause is better.

Scope control: Part 1: 20-30 seconds. Do not answer a narrow question as a mini essay.
